Plants That Actually Help Control Pests

One of the great things about gardening is that in some ways your garden can take care of itself. We're not endorsing abandoning your garden chores completely, but here is one of the ways your plants can help control insect pests.

Certain plants contain properties that either invite beneficial insects (like ladybugs and praying mantis) or repel harmful insects. Using plants for pest control not only cuts down on your workload, but it also reduces the amount of insecticides that you use in your garden. And fewer insecticides means more good bugs, which in turn means help in controlling bad bugs.

HERE ARE SOME HELPFUL PLANTS TO CONSIDER:

Artemisia

Basil

Bee Balm

Borage

Chrysanthemums

Dahlias

Dill

Chives

Catnip

Four O'Clocks

Lavender

Garlic

Hyssop

Marigolds

Nasturtiums

Sunflowers

Petunias
